“ It's hard to think of my friends passing on when they are so young and should have had so much more time to be with those who loved and cared for them. Remembering the laughter we shared and the good times we had is all we have left when death comes too soon. The girls we were and the women we became was shaped by our friendships from childhood, of which I have such fond memories. I will sorely miss Susie's infectious grin and her enthusiasm for life, never forgetting our trip to Mexico and the silliness of girls being girls. I only wish there was time for one more phone call or one more e-mail to tell her how much her friendship in high school meant to me during those difficult years. She could make me laugh through the tears just by being herself, for that I am grateful. I am all the better for having known her.
